

The Jews Behind Modern Culture

Joey McGoebbels

Jett and Jahn Media

Introduction

Jews proudly admit their role in creating modern American culture.

In fact, Rob Eshman from the Jewish Journal wrote “when they say Jews control Hollywood, I always think to myself: Thank God.”

He explained:

“Understanding the people who shape America's culture is hardly just an exercise in Jewish pride. Because even as America's political and industrial influence has waned, culture has remained one of its most popular exports.”

Eshman further added:

“It's useful to consider what Jews and only Jews bring to the writing table. Not because it's better or worse (my sense is it may be the former, but the laws of political correctness mandate I throw in that phrase), but because it is Jews whose style and whose themes have dominated the entertainment media for much of the past century.”

Therefore, Jett and Jahn Media created “The Jews Behind Culture” series to examine the ideas that have “dominated the entertainment media for much of the past century”.

Sigmund Freud

Sexual Revolution

In 1856, Sigismund Schlomo Freud was born in Freiberg (modern day Czech Republic).

He was a psychologist and developed theories about the unconscious mind and the effects of “sexual repression”.

But what was the REAL purpose of Freud’s work?

“Hannibal, whom I had come to resemble in these respects, had been the favorite hero of my later school days. Like so many boys of that age, I had sympathized not with the Romans but with the Carthaginians. And when in the higher classes I began to understand for the first time what it meant to belong to an alien race, and anti-Semitic feelings among the other boys warned me that I must take up a definite position, the figure of the Semitic general rose still higher in my esteem. To my youthful mind Hannibal and Rome symbolized the tenacity of Jewry and the organization of the Catholic Church.”

Freud added he was motivated by Hannibal:

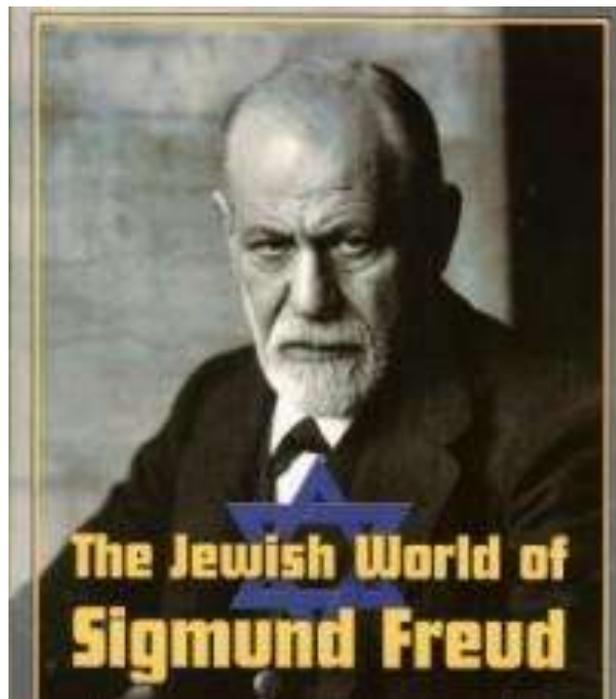

“Scene in which Hannibal’s father, Hamilcar Barva, made his boy swear before the household altar to take vengeance on the Roman. Ever since that time, Hannibal had had a place in my fantasies.”

In other words, Freud fantasized about destroying European society.

Freud was inspired by Hannibal because he also wanted to conquer Europe.

Freud’s psychological theories were formed by his own dreams and childhood memories. He claimed he remembered hating his father and was convinced he had sexual feelings towards his mother.

Freud later wrote “I found in myself a constant love for my mother, and jealousy of my father. I now consider this to be a universal event in childhood”.

Freud hoped to prove his personal experience was widespread. He named his new theory the Oedipus complex after the Greek tragedy Oedipus Rex by Sophocles.

Freud argued the Oedipus complex was bisexual, with a sexual attraction to both parents.

Freud claimed humans sexually develop in stages of progression. He believed each "stage" was a progression toward adult sexual "maturity".

First Stage: oral stimulation (Freud's infant pleasure in nursing)

Second Stage: anal stimulation (Freud's childhood pleasure in using the restroom)

Third Stage: phallic stage (Freud's teenage pleasure in masturbation)

Freud claimed children need the proper amount of satisfaction at each stage to move forward to the next stage of development.

In other words, he argued infants need sexual experiences to "mature".

In 1997, Camilla Paglia wrote in Salon Magazine that Freud "shockingly established that sexuality does not begin at puberty but in childhood and even infancy".

Freud's revolutionary vision has been accomplished. Children have been sexualized, the family has been damaged, and traditional morality largely forgotten.

His theories influenced a whole new generation of Jewish intellectuals that spread his ideas.

Freud's theories inspired future Jewish psychologist Wilhelm Reich, who created and spread the term "Sexual Revolution" in 1930.

In 2004, Jewish author Nathan Abrams wrote in "The Jewish Quarterly" that:

"Jews were also at the vanguard of the sexual revolution in the 1960's. Wilhelm Reich, Herbert Marcuse, and Paul Goodman replaced Marx, Trotsky, and Lenin as required revolutionary reading. Pacheco was one of the Jewish porn stars that read Reich's intellectual marriage of Freud and Marx."

Abrams also refers to an interview with Al Goldstein, the Jewish publisher of Screw Magazine who claimed:

“The only reason Jews are in pornography is that we think Christ sucks. Catholicism sucks, we don’t believe in authoritarianism. Pornography thus becomes a way of defiling Christian culture”.

Abrams claims that “Jewish involvement in porn, by this argument is the result of an atavistic hatred of hatred of Christian authority. They are trying to weaken the dominant culture in America by moral subversion.” Sound familiar?

The “Sexual Revolution” is the continuation of Freud’s campaign to promote Judaism and destroy Western Civilization.

Karl Marx

Communism

Karl Marx was a philosopher, economist, sociologist, and revolutionary socialist. In 1848, he wrote “The Communist Manifesto” and became the father of modern social science.

But like Sigmund Freud and Betty Friedan, his work had a deeper purpose.

Both of his grandfathers, Meier Halevi Marx and Isaac Pressburg were Jewish rabbis.

Marx hated German Idealism, the philosophical theory that ideas are more important than physical objects. He criticized German philosophers including Immanuel Kant, Johann Gottlieb Fichte, and Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel.

Marx promoted materialism, the theory that physical objects are more important than ideas. He claimed spiritual ideas like “God”, “marriage”, and “family” were fake, socially created theories.

In 1845, he criticized German Idealism in his book, “The German Ideology”.

Marx claimed Germans spent too much time in “the realm of philosophy”. He thought their ideas were confusing and abstract.

He wrote Germans “lack not only the necessary power of comprehension and the material but also the evidence of their senses”.

He explained “in direct contrast to German philosophy which descends from heaven to earth, here we ascend from earth to heaven”

In other words, Marx believed Germans waste their time thinking about cultural traditions and spiritual ideas. He wanted people to focus on physical objects and create a “worker’s paradise” (heaven on earth).

Marx believed:

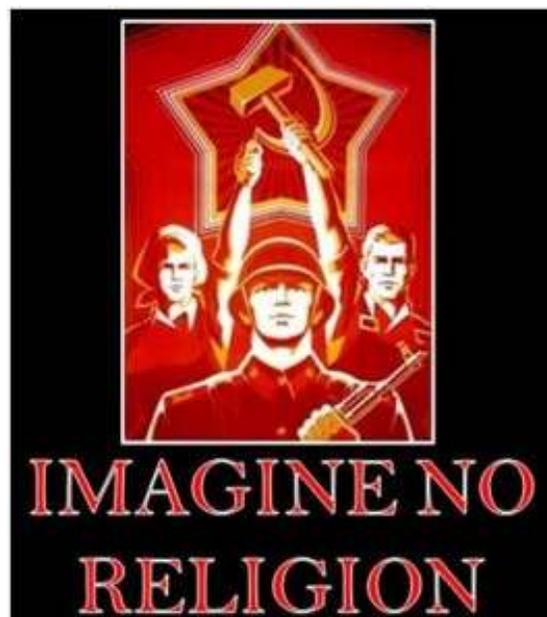

“In history up to the present it is certainly an empirical fact that separate individuals have, with the broadening of their activity into world-historical activity, become more and more enslaved under a power alien to them, a power which has become more and more enormous and, in the last instance, turns out to be the world market.”

Hmmm, interesting... So what is the solution?

Marx claimed:

“The overthrow of the existing state of society by the communist revolution and the abolition of private property which is identical with it, this power, which so baffles the German theoreticians, will be dissolved; and that then the liberation of each single individual will be accomplished in the measure in which history becomes transformed into world history. Only then will the separate individuals be liberated from the various national and local barriers”

In other words, Marx argued the world would be free without nations, religion, and private wealth. (Sounds like that John Lennon song...)

Marx theory is flawed because he totally ignores what makes people human. Our spiritual ideas define who we are and how we live. His classless, stateless society would also destroy cultural traditions. (That was probably his goal though...)

In 1848, Marx expanded on these theories in his book, "The Communist Manifesto".

In the opening of the book, Marx claims "The history of all hitherto existing society is the history of class struggles."

He explains, "society as a whole is more and more splitting up into two great hostile camps, into two great classes directly facing each other — Bourgeoisie and Proletariat." In other words, Marx claims society is divided between the bourgeoisie and the proletariat, the rich and the poor, the haves and the have-nots.

Marx claims the bourgeoisie uses religion to distract everyone, the family structure to oppress women, and nations to divide people.

In reality though, Marx blames the wealthy bourgeoisie to distract everyone from the true source of global conflict... Jewish Communism... Marx has become one of the most influential figures in human history and his ideas have spread throughout the world.

His political ideas have influenced Vladimir Lenin, Leon Trotsky, Chairman Mao and most recently Barack Obama.

Modern communism is the continuation of Marx's theory to expand the government and destroy the family.

Betty Friedan

Feminism

In 1921, Bettye Naomi Goldstein was born in Peoria, Illinois.

She later became an author and wrote "The Feminine Mystique", the book that became the cornerstone of radical American feminism.

But like Freud, her work had a deeper purpose.

As a child, she read Marx and was inspired by Jewish communism. In a 1976 interview with Jewish feminist magazine Lilith, Friedan admitted her passion "originated from my feelings of the injustice of anti-Semitism".

Friedan was also embarrassed by the lack of attention she received from boys. In "Betty Friedan And the Making of The Feminine Mystique", Daniel Horowitz wrote "she worried that because she was not sexy, she would never marry".

Friedan, like most feminists, was jealous of women that married handsome men and had beautiful families. Like most feminists, she knew she was unattractive and could never achieve that dream.

Friedan later claimed she grew up with "an inferiority complex" that made her feel like "a social outcast". She claims most of her childhood was spent in the "depths of misery".

So she decided to make EVERYONE miserable...

In 1963 Friedan wrote "The Feminine Mystique", which examined the role of women in industrial society and claimed housewives were oppressed.

In the book, she defines the feminine mystique as "the idea that women were naturally fulfilled by devoting their lives to being housewives and mothers".

That's right, she claims motherhood is a socially created myth...Friedan explains, "the problem lay buried, unspoken, for many years in the minds of American women. It was a strange stirring, a sense of dissatisfaction, a yearning that women suffered in the middle of the 20th century in the United States. Each suburban wife struggled with it alone. As she made the beds, shopped for groceries ... she was afraid to ask even of herself the silent question — "Is this all?"

She urges her audience that "we can no longer ignore that voice within women that says: "I want something more than my husband and my children and my home."

Friedan also claimed women are as capable as men to do ANY type of work or follow ANY career path.

In 1966, Friedan founded the National Organization for Women. The group's goal was to bring women "into the mainstream of American society in fully equal partnership with men".

In 1970, Friedan also organized the Women's Strike for Equality. 20,000 feminists gathered in the streets of New York City to burn their bras...

After the event, Friedan declared "it exceeded my wildest dreams. It's now a political movement and the message is clear".

Her theories went mainstream and influenced a generation of Jewish feminists that spread her message.

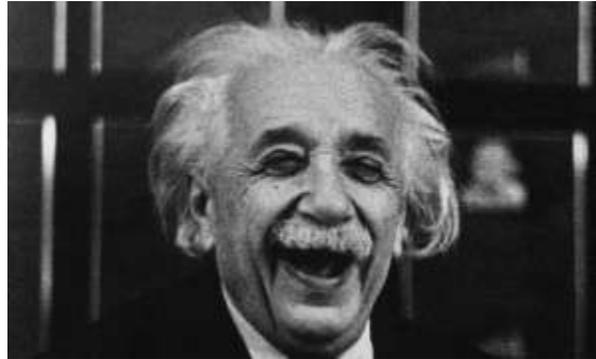

Her cultural ideas have been promoted by many Jewish celebrities including Gloria Steinem, Barbara Streisand, Barbara Walters, and Judy Blume.

Her political ideas have also been represented by many Jewish politicians including Diane Feinstein, Barbara Boxer, Hilary Rosen, and Debbie Wasserman Schultz.

Albert Einstein

Modern Science

Albert Einstein was a physicist and philosopher whose name has become synonymous with “genious”. In 1917, he wrote published a paper on the theory of relativity and became the father of modern science.

But like Freud, Friedan, & Marx, his work had a deeper purpose.

He wrote, “Einstein was descended, on both parents’ sides, from Jewish tradesmen and peddlers.” However there were no Jewish schools in Munich, so he briefly attended a Catholic school for three years. He was the only Jew among the 70 students in his class.

Einstein claimed the Catholics were intolerant. He later wrote that a teacher “brought a long nail to the lesson and told the students that with such nails Christ had been nailed to the Cross by the Jews”.

He also claimed “among the children at the elementary school anti-Semitism was prevalent...Physical attacks and insults on the way home from school were frequent, but for the most part not too vicious.”

Meanwhile, Isaacson claims “Einstein developed a passionate zeal for Judaism.” Einstein’s sister once wrote “He was so fervent in his feelings that, on his own, he observed Jewish religious strictures in every detail. He ate no pork, kept kosher and obeyed the strictures of the Sabbath. He even composed his own hymns, which he sang to himself as he walked home from school.”

Einstein was also influenced by Max Talmud, a Jewish medical student who dined with his family once a week. The Einstein's followed an old Jewish custom and invited him to share the Sabbath meal with them.

Einstein later explained "through the reading of popular scientific books, I soon reached the conviction that much in the stories of the Bible could not be true. The consequence was a positively fanatic orgy of free thinking coupled with the impression that youth is intentionally being deceived by the state through lies." He was also influenced by Jewish philosopher Baruch Spinoza and his theories of scientific rationalism.

Later Einstein declared, "I believe in Spinoza's God, who reveals himself in the harmony of all that exists, not in a God who concerns himself with the fate and the doings of mankind."

Einstein made a strong distinction between science and religion. He claimed:

"Scientists aim to uncover the immutable laws that govern reality, and in doing so they must reject the notion that divine will, or for that matter human will, plays a role that would violate this cosmic causality." He wrote "veneration for this force beyond anything that we can comprehend is my religion. To that extent I am, in fact, religious."

In other words, Einstein's religion was Jewish Science.

He hated German Idealism, the philosophical theory that ideas are more important than physical objects.

Einstein criticized German nationalism and believed it was “an infantile disease, the measles of mankind”. He claimed “We Jews have been too eager to sacrifice our idiosyncrasies in order to conform.”

He promoted materialism, the theory that objects are more important than ideas. He claimed people need rational, scientific evidence to prove the existence of spiritual ideas (like God).

The Catholic Church blasted Einstein, claimed he was a fraud, and doubted his scientific theories.

The Archbishop of Boston, Cardinal William Henry O’Connell claimed “the outcome of this doubt and befogged speculation about time and space is a cloak beneath which hides the ghastly apparition of atheism”.

The Archbishop of New York, popular television host Fulton Sheen claimed Einstein’s theories were “the sheerest kind of stupidity and nonsense.”

The German government was also highly critical of Jewish Science. In 1933, Einstein decided to leave Germany when Adolf Hitler was elected chancellor. A month later, the German government passed a law that banned Jews from holding any government positions, which included teaching at universities.

Einstein’s writing was also among the Jewish books burned by the German government on April 6th, 1933. The “Action Against the Un-German Spirit” Day was meant to symbolize the purification of the German culture.

At the ceremony, Joseph Goebbels, the German Director of Propaganda declared “the era of extreme Jewish intellectualism is now at an end”.

He believed “the future German man will not just be a man of books, but a man of character.”

The German government also added Einstein’s name to a list of assassination targets, with a “$5,000 bounty on his head.” One German magazine included him in a list of Jews with the phrase, “not yet hanged”.

Meanwhile, Einstein took up a position at the Institute for Advanced Study in Princeton, New Jersey. He worked with many other Jewish scientists who fled Germany.

In fact, Einstein wrote, “For me the most beautiful thing is to be in contact with a few fine Jews—a few millennia of a civilized past do mean something after all.” In another letter he writes, “In my whole life I have never felt so Jewish as now.

“In 1939, Einstein led a group of Jewish scientists that warned the United States government of Nazi atomic bomb research. Einstein, Leó Szilárd, Edward Teller, and Eugene Wigner claimed it was “their responsibility to alert Americans to the possibility that German scientists might win the race to build an atomic bomb.”

The group wrote a letter to President Franklin D. Roosevelt and recommended that the government get involved in uranium research and develop a nuclear weapon. Roosevelt listened to Einstein’s advice and entered the “race” to develop the bomb.

Roosevelt created the “Manhattan Project”, led by a dozen Jewish scientists including Robert Oppenheimer, David Bohm, Leó Szilárd, Eugene Wigner, Rudolf Peierls, Otto Frisch, Niels Bohr, Felix Bloch, James Franck, Emilio Segre, Klaus Fuchs, and Edward Teller.

(Yes, the atomic bomb was actually developed by Jewish scientists that fantasized about blowing up Germany...)

Einstein himself openly hated Germany and the Catholic Church.

In 1919, he wrote "I am convinced that some political and social activities and practices of the Catholic organizations are detrimental and even dangerous for the community as a whole, here and everywhere."

In 1930, Einstein wrote "When you learn the history of the Catholic Church, you wouldn't trust the Center Party. Hasn't Hitler promised to smash the Bolsheviks in Russia? The Church will bless its Catholic soldiers to march alongside the Nazis"

He added "I predict that the Vatican will support Hitler if he comes to power. The Church since Constantine has always favored the authoritarian State, as long as the State allows the Church to baptize and instruct the masses."

Later, Times Magazine claimed Einstein had temporarily changed his views. They published a quote from Einstein which said "Only the Church stood squarely across the path of Hitler's campaign for suppressing truth."

HOWEVER, Einstein was furious and later claimed he never actually said that. He explained "the wording of the statement you have quoted is not my own. Shortly after Hitler came to power in Germany I had an oral conversation with a newspaper man about these matters. Since then my remarks have been elaborated and exaggerated nearly beyond recognition."

In 1943, Einstein wrote “so often in history the Jews have been the instigators of justice and reform whether in Spain, Germany or Russia. But no sooner have they done their job than their ‘friends’, often blessed by the Church, spit in their faces”

He continued, “But what makes me shudder is that the Catholic Church is silent. One doesn’t need to be a prophet to say, ‘The Catholic Church will pay for this silence...I do not say that the unspeakable crimes of the Church for 2,000 years had always the blessing of the Vatican, but it vaccinated its believers with the idea: We have the true God, and the Jews have crucified Him.”

He added, “With a few exceptions, the Roman Catholic Church has stressed the value of dogma and ritual, conveying the idea theirs is the only way to reach heaven. I don’t need to go to Church to hear if I’m good or bad; my heart tells me this.”

Later in 1943, Einstein wrote another letter criticizing the Catholicism. He wrote, “I don’t like to implant in youth the Church’s doctrine of a personal God, because that Church has behaved so inhumanly in the past 2,000 years.”

He added “consider the hate the Church manifested against the Jews and then against the Muslims, the Crusades with their crimes, the burning stakes of the inquisition, the tacit consent of Hitler’s actions while the Jews and the Poles dug their own graves and were slaughtered. And Hitler is said to have been an altar boy!”

To be fair though, Einstein was critical of ALL religions.

In 1954, he was asked about the Jewish religion and replied, “for me, the Jewish religion like all other religions is an incarnation of the most childish superstitions. And the Jewish people to whom I gladly belong and with whose mentality I have a deep affinity have no different quality for me than all other people. As far as my experience goes, they are also no better than other human groups, although they are protected from the worst cancers by a lack of power. Otherwise I cannot see anything “chosen” about them.”

Privately though, Einstein believed in Jewish Science and the rational theories of Aaron Bernstein and Baruch Spinoza.

Isaacson claims that before Einstein died, he had settled into a faith based on the “spirit manifest in the laws of the universe” and a sincere belief in a “God who reveals Himself in the harmony of all that exists.”

That’s not faith in God, but faith in science...

George Soros

The Democratic Party

George Soros is a businessman, investor, and political contributor to the Democratic Party. Forbes estimates Soros net worth is $20 billion, making him the 22nd richest person in the world and the 7th wealthiest person in America.

Throughout his life, Soros has also given away $8 billion to various liberal political organizations.

But what is the real purpose behind his philanthropy?

In 1930, George Soros (Schwartz) was born in Budapest, Hungary into a Jewish family. His mother Erzebet's family owned a silk shop and his father Tivader was a lawyer.

George moved to England in 1947 and lived with his wealthy Jewish uncle. His uncle paid for his living expenses while he attended the London School of Economics.

Soros was a student of Jewish philosopher Karl Popper and influenced by his ideas. Popper is known for his "open society" theory, an intellectual effort to eliminate cultural boundaries following World War II.

Popper advocated for an “open society”, condemning Germany as a closed, tribal culture. Popper claimed traditional cultures needed to be destroyed and replaced with global communities.

Soros was influenced by Popper and inspired by his idea of an “open society”. He believed people needed to embrace the influence of other lifestyles and accept diversity.

After college, Soros worked at Singer & Friedlander (Jewish bank in London, England). In 1956, Soros was hired as an arbitrage trader for F. M. Mayer (Jewish investment company in New York City). Three years later, he worked as an analyst for Wertheim & Co. (another Jewish investment company).

Eventually in 1963, he became the vice-president at Arnhold and S. Bleichroderl (another Jewish investment company linked to the Rothschild family).

In 1967, Soros took control of First Eagle Funds, an offshore investment account and the Double Eagle hedge fund.

In 1970, Soros began his own investment company, Soros Fund Management. His company plays the market and earns profit through stock speculations.

On September 16, 1992 (also known as “Black Wednesday”), Soros’ sold $10 billion in stock shares which caused a European market crisis.

Afterwards, the UK government withdrew from the European Exchange Rate Mechanism and their currency lost value. Soros earned an estimated $1.1 billion from the crisis and market analysts called him “the man who broke the Bank of England”.

Jewish economist Paul Krugman wrote: “nobody who has read a business magazine in the last few years can be unaware that these days there really are investors who not only move money in anticipation of a currency crisis, but actually do their best to trigger that crisis for fun and profit.”

Soros recognized he was the embodiment of the Jewish stereotype and tried to deflect criticism.

At a Jewish forum in New York City, November 5, 2003, Soros blamed modern anti-Semitism on the policies of Israel and the role of wealthy individuals. He said:

“There is a resurgence of anti-Semitism in Europe. The policies of the Bush administration and the Sharon administration contribute to that. It’s not specifically anti-Semitism, but it does manifest itself in anti-Semitism as well. I’m critical of those policies... If we change that direction, then anti-Semitism also will diminish. I can’t see how one could confront it directly... I’m also very concerned about my own role because the new anti-Semitism holds that the Jews rule the world... As an unintended consequence of my actions... I also contribute to that image.”

In 1993, Soros founded the Open Society Foundations (now known as the Open Society Institute). The organization was created to “shape public policy to promote democratic governance, human rights, and economic, legal, and social reform.” Altogether, Soros contributes more than $400 million a year to the Democratic Party and liberal political groups. Soros has also been accused of funding the Occupy Wall Street protests.

In other words, Soros hopes to push liberal social revolutions and destroy traditional conservative values.

William Kristol

The Neocons

William Kristol is a political analyst, commentator, and recognized as a leader within the Republican Party. He is the founder and editor of “The Weekly Standard” magazine and often appears on Fox News Network.

But what is the real purpose behind his political message? Is he a true conservative?

In 1952, Kristol was born in New York City, New York into a Jewish family.

His father, Irving Kristol was a political philosopher and widely recognized as the founder of Neoconservatism.

In 1973, political analyst Michael Harrington created the term “neoconservatism” to criticize Irving Kristol and his political philosophy.

Harrington believed a group of liberal intellectuals had grown apart from the political and cultural attitudes of Democratic Party. He claimed these “neoconservatives” were actually liberals creating a new form of false conservatism.

However, Irving Kristol actually embraced the term and founded the Neoconservative movement.

In February 1979, he was featured on the cover of Esquire Magazine and described as “the godfather of the most powerful new political force in America — Neoconservatism”.

In 1979, Kristol received a Ph.D. in government from Harvard. He was named chief of staff to the Secretary of Education during the Reagan administration in 1985. After President George H. W. Bush was elected in 1988, Kristol became the Chief of Staff to Vice President Dan Quayle. In 1990, The New Republic claimed Kristol was “Dan Quayle’s brain”.

Jewish journalist Phillip Weiss of Mondoweiss described Kristol as a “Republican Party warlord” and claimed he is “treated like royalty” in the Jewish community.

Kristol has used his power to influence Republican leaders and slander his opponents. He recently declared that “all the elements hostile to Israel inside the Republican Party were purged over the last 30 years”.

He believes true conservatives like Ron Paul and Pat Buchanan should be “be expelled or not welcomed into the Republican Party” since they do not promote Israel.

In 2002, Kristol was a leading advocate for the War in Iraq. He sent a public letter to President Bush and claimed Israel was in danger. In the letter, Kristol wrote:

“Israel’s fight against terrorism is our fight. Israel’s victory is an important part of our victory. For reasons both moral and strategic, we need to stand with Israel in its fight against terrorism.”

In 2010, Kristol formed the Emergency Committee For Israel to promote and spread Zionism in America.

Kristol has also supported President Barack Obama’s decision to intervene in the Libyan civil war and wants to expand the “War on Terror” into Iran to “defend Israel”.

Kristol & his NeoCons have are determined to fight wars for the “chosen people”. Many Republican leaders are more dedicated to fighting for Israel than protecting America.

Lou Pearlman

The Boybands

Lou Pearlman was a Jewish music producer and manager, known for bringing back the boy-band craze of the 1990's.

But what was his purpose for creating these bands? Fame? Wealth? Or another reason...

It all started back in 1992, when Pearlman placed an ad in Orlando Sentinel to create a vocal group of teen males.

Later, he selected A. J. McLean, Howie Dorough, Nick Carter, Kevin Richardson, and Brian Littrell.

The Backstreet Boys have sold over 130 million albums worldwide, making them the best-selling boy band of all time, and one of the world's best-selling music artists.

Again in 1995, Pearlman began searching for more teen males for another band.

He brought Chris Kirkpatrick, Joey Fatone, Justin Timberlake, JC Chasez, and Lance Bass together to form *NSync, which has sold over 50 million albums worldwide.

He also brought Rich Cronin, Devin Lima, and Brad Fischetti together to form LFO, which had a few successful songs including "Summer Girls" and "Girl on TV".

However in 1997, Pearlman's bands started accusing him of stealing their money.

In 1997, the Backstreet Boys filed a lawsuit against Pearlman and claimed he had not been truthful about the earnings made by the group. (Well, they must just be anti-Semitic?)

Eventually, they reached a settlement out of court.

In 1998, *NSYNC brought their own lawsuit against Pearlman for “illicit business practices”. They claimed he had stolen fifty percent of the group’s earnings, when he had originally promised he would only receive one-sixth of their profits. (Well... they must also be anti-Semitic?)

Again, another settlement was reached out of court.

In 2000, Pearlman created “Making the Band” an MTV reality television series which followed him his next boy band, O-Town.

At the end of the series, he selected Jacob Underwood, Ashley Parker Angel, Erik-Michael Estrada, Trevor Penick, and Dan Miller. The group had a few successful songs including “Liquid Dreams” and “All or Nothing”, but broke up in 2003.

The former members released a press statement, blaming Pearlman and claiming he had created “financial problems” for the group. (Are you sensing a pattern?)

Out of the 12 bands Pearlman has created, 11 have sued him for misrepresentation and fraud.

In a 2006 interview, Justin Timberlake said his band felt like it “was being financially raped by a Svengali.”

Unfortunately, there was also inappropriate physical contact that took place between Pearlman and the young boys.

In fact, Backstreet Boys member Nick Carter's mother claimed:

"Certain things happened and it almost destroyed our family. I tried to warn everyone. I tried to warn all the mothers... I tried to expose him for what he was years ago.... I hope you expose him, because the financial is the least of his injustices.

"Some, especially the teenagers, shrugged and giggled when he showed them pornographic movies or jumped naked onto their beds in the morning to wrestle and play. Others, it appears, didn't get off so easily. These were the young singers seen emerging from his bedroom late at night, buttoning their pants, sheepish looks on their faces."

Later in the article, LFO member Rich Cronin claimed:"It was so obvious and disgusting.... He definitely came at people. He came at me. In my situation I avoided him like the plague. If I went to his house, I went with somebody. I would never go with him alone. Because I knew every time I was over there by myself it always led to some weird situation. Like he'd call late at night to come over and talk about a tour, and you'd get there and he'd be sitting there in boxers. The guy was hairy as a bear."

Pearlman has never been held accountable for his sexual vices but eventually faced charges for his financial misconduct.

In 2007, he was accused of operating a Ponzi scheme and cheating 2,000 investors out of $317 million dollars over the last 15 years. A dozen banks also sued Pearlman for more than $130 million in back loans.

Pearlman had claimed that his company, Trans Continental Airlines earned $80 million a year. As it turns out though, the company didn't even exist. When his investors began requesting money, he fled the country for Indonesia. He was later arrested, found guilty, and sentenced to 25 years in prison.

Ultimately, Pearlman was a Jewish pedophile that created these bands to molest the boys that became our generation's biggest stars.

David Stern

Basketball

In December of 1935, Newsweek Magazine declared basketball was “a sport at which Jews excel” due to their “lack of size” and “mental acuity”.

Hmmm, not sure where anyone came up with that theory... but National Basketball Association Commissioner David Stern is Jewish and definitely excels at controlling modern basketball.

Stern took over as commissioner in 1984 and immediately began to transform the game into a $3.64 billion-a-year industry. Other Jews have also jumped on the money train.

Chicago Bulls: Jerry Reinsdorf
Cleveland Cavaliers: Dan Gilbert
Dallas Mavericks: Mark Cuban
Detroit Pistons: William Davidson
Houston Rockets: Leslie Alexander
Los Angeles Clippers: Donald Sterling
Miami Heat: Micky Arison
Milwaukee Bucks: Herb Kohl
New Jersey Nets: Bruce Ratner
Philadelphia 76ers: Ed Snider
Toronto Raptors: Larry Tannenbaum
Washington Wizards: Abe Pollin

Stern's critics claim he controls which teams receive the best players.

In 1985, Stern introduced the draft lottery system to determine the order in which team's select college players.

In every other sport, the worst team gets the first pick and gets to select the best college player.

However, Stern introduced the lottery system which means EVERY team that does not make the playoffs has a chance to receive the first pick.

Meanwhile, critics claim Stern actually fixes the results of the draft lottery to distribute the best players to the teams he likes the most. (aka: owned by Jews)

Six of the last eight teams to win the NBA Draft lottery are owned by Jews:

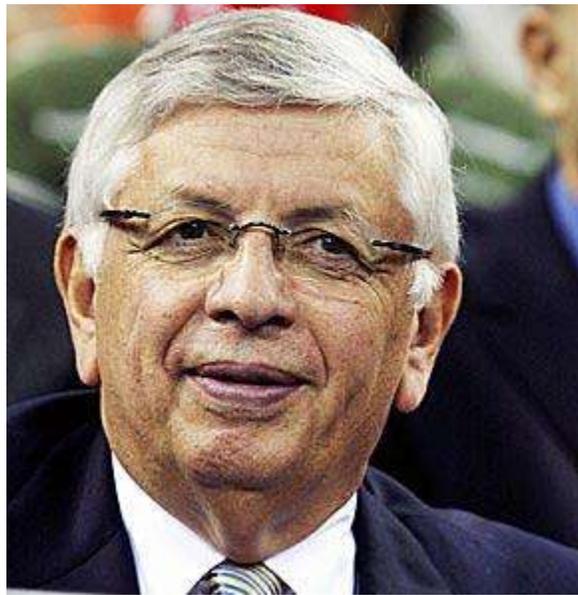

(2005: Milwaukee Bucks, 2006: Toronto Raptors, 2008: Chicago Bulls, 2009: Los Angeles Clippers, 2010: Washington Wizards, 2011: Los Angeles Clippers)

In 2010, critics claim Stern convinced LeBron James and Chris Bosh to join Dwayne Wade and play for the Miami Heat. (owned by Jew Micky Arison)

Most recently, Stern blocked a trade that would have sent Chris Paul to the Los Angeles Lakers. INSTEAD, the Hornets traded Chris Paul to the Los Angeles Clippers (owned by Jew Donald Sterling).

This year, the New Orleans Hornets CONVENIENTLY "won" the first pick in the NBA draft lottery.

Conspiracy theorists are already claiming Stern rigged this year's draft lottery and gave the pick to the Hornets to make up for the Chris Paul deal.

Stern has also promoted diversity and turned basketball into a symbol of black culture. Children worship their favorite players and buy expensive jerseys and shoes to identify with them. (all to profit the Jews...)

Jews have not only turned baseball into a lucrative business but use it to promote diversity.

The financial aspect of basketball has created controversy between the Jewish owners and the black players.

Last March when the NBA players association considered going on strike for more money, Stern angrily told them he knew where "the bodies are buried" in the NBA, because he had buried some of them himself.

Don't get me wrong, I am not telling everyone to stop following basketball. However, people should remember who they are supporting when they buy expensive tickets and merchandise...

Bud Selig

Baseball

In 1920, Henry Ford wrote “if fans wish to know the trouble with American baseball they have it in three words... too much Jew...” Major League Baseball Commissioner Bud Selig continues the Jewish influence on the American pastime. Selig is widely known as “the steroids commissioner” due to the performance enhancing drugs scandal throughout his tenure.

Former MLB commissioner Fay Vincent also accused Selig and Jerry Reinsdorf (another Jew) of rigging the free agency process to control which teams receive the best players.

More importantly, Bud Selig is also known for his crackdown on “racism” in baseball.

Here are some highlights:

In 1992, Selig gave former Cincinnati Reds owner Marge Schott a one year suspension for “racially insensitive remarks”. Schott had called several of her players “million dollar niggers”. On another occasion, she claimed “sneaky goddamn Jews are all alike.” Schott kept a Nazi swastika armband at her house and claimed Adolf Hitler “was initially good but went too far”.

In 1997, Selig retired Jackie Robinson's #42 jersey number for every team in the entire league. Robinson was the first black player in Major League Baseball back in 1947. Selig has promoted the legacy of Robinson and turned him into an American cultural icon.

In 2000, Selig gave former Atlanta Braves closer John Rocker a 28 game suspension for "racially insensitive remarks". In a Sports Illustrated interview, Rocker called one of his black teammates a "fat monkey". Rocker also blasted foreigners and claimed "you can walk an entire block in Times Square and not hear anybody speaking English. Asians and Koreans and Vietnamese and Indians and Russians and Spanish people and everything up there. How the hell did they get in this country?" He also said he felt uncomfortable sitting next to "some queer with AIDS".

In 2005, Selig fined former Chicago White Sox (current Miami Marlins) manager Ozzie Guillen for calling reporter Jay Mariotti a "fag". Selig also forced Guillen to take sensitivity training. In 2007, Selig started the Civil Rights Game which is played every year to honor black history in America.

In 2010 however, black baseball player Torii Hunter was NOT suspended after he made "racially insensitive" remarks. Hunter, an outfielder with the Los Angeles Angels, claimed "people see dark faces out there, and the perception is that they're African-American. They're not us. They're impostors. Even people I know come up and say: 'Hey, what color is Vladimir Guerrero? Is he a black player?' I say, 'Come on, he's Dominican. He's not black.' ... As African-American players, we have a theory that baseball can go get an imitator and pass them off as us."

In fact, Selig actually agreed with Hunter and came out in support of him. In an interview with ESPN, Selig claimed "somewhere we lost a generation or two of African-Americans. I don't know why that happened, but we are coming back. You look at Ryan Howard, Prince Fielder, Jason Heyward, a lot of young African-American stars. We've got to continue to do better, and we will." Selig supports Reviving Baseball in Inner Cities, an MLB funded organization to promote baseball to black kids.

In 2011, Selig forced Los Angeles Dodgers owner Frank McCourt to sell his team. McCourt, an Irish Catholic, was in the middle of a costly divorce with his Jewish wife, Jamie. (Imagine that...) McCourt negotiated a 17 year television deal with Fox Sports worth $3 billion dollars to avoid bankruptcy. The television contract needed Selig's approval as commissioner though and he refused to sign off on the deal. Selig forced McCourt to sell the Dodgers and they were eventually bought by Guggenheim Partners (a Jewish owned corporation).

Bud Selig has gradually transformed Major League Baseball into a $6 billion a year industry. Other Jews have also jumped on the money train.

Ten Major League Baseball teams are currently owned by Jews:

Chicago White Sox: Jerry Reinsdorf

Los Angeles Dodgers: Guggenheim Partners

Miami Marlins: Jeffrey Loria

Milwaukee Brewers: Mark Attansio

New York Mets: Fred Wilpon

New York Yankees: Hal Steinbrenner

Oakland Athletics: Lewis Wolff

Tampa Bay Rays: Stuart Sternberg

Texas Rangers: Chuck Greenberg

Washington Nationals: Ted Lerner

Most recently, Selig did not suspend Milwaukee Brewers outfielder Ryan Braun (another Jew) after he tested positive for performance enhancing drugs.

Jews have not only turned baseball into a lucrative business but use it to promote diversity.

Don't get me wrong, I am not telling everyone to stop following baseball. I personally enjoy the game and will continue to watch it.

However, people should remember who they are supporting when they buy expensive tickets and merchandise...

Mark Zuckerberg

Facebook

Back in 2004, Mark Zuckerberg created Facebook, a social networking website. Users create a personal profile, add other users as “friends”, “tag” photos, and “like” their interests and posts their friends have made.

Today, Facebook has over 900 million active users around the world.

Social Media Today claims 41.6% of Americans have a Facebook account.

Zuckerberg is now worth an estimated $19.1 billion, making him one of the 30 wealthiest people on Earth.

So, who is Mark Zuckerberg?

He was born in White Plains, New York in 1984. He grew up in a Jewish family and attended Temple Beth Abraham in Tarrytown, New York.

In a recent article in The Daily Scarsdale, Matt Bultman interviewed Rabbi David Holtz who described “Zuckerberg’s “Star Wars”-themed bar mitzvah” and “a trip to Israel with the 15-year-old Zuckerberg”.

In 2002, Zuckerberg enrolled at Harvard to study psychology and computer science.

He joined Alpha Epsilon Pi, the Jewish fraternity and met a group of friends. The next year, they lived together in Harvard's Kirkland House in two adjoining rooms.

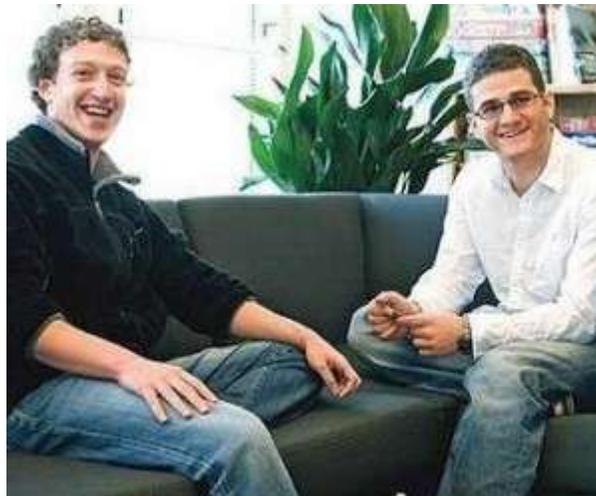

Zuckerberg's roommates included Dustin Moskovitz, Joey Siesholtz, Arie Hasit, Billy Olson, Joe Green, Chris Hughes. Arie Hasit is now serving in the Israel Defense Forces Spokesperson Unit.

In a 2009 interview with Haaretz Jewish Magazine, he described his relationship with Zuckerberg.

Hasit remembered he met Zuckerberg in 2002 after they had joined the same fraternity. "We ate Shabbat dinner together, every year we raised money for charities in Israel.

"He also claimed Zuckerberg "fasts on Yom Kippur. Sometimes he would come to the Hillel House, a Jewish organization that ran various activities."

Hasit also described living in the dorm with Zuckerberg. "He was in one room while I was in the other. This was a large apartment, we were seven students crammed into five bedrooms. We saw each other every day for a number of hours."

In February of 2004, Zuckerberg launched Facebook with the assistance of Eduardo Saverin, Dustin Moskovitz, Chris Hughes. (Saverin and Moskovitz are both Jewish)

In 2008, Zuckerberg hired Jewish feminist Sheryl Sandberg as the Chief Operating Officer (COO) at Facebook. From 1996 to 2001, Sandberg was the Chief of Staff to the United States Secretary of the Treasury. Sandberg was ranked #5 on "the world's 100 most powerful women" by Forbes Magazine in 2011. She is on the board of directors for the Walt Disney Company and Starbucks. In her position at Facebook, she is second in rank to Zuckerberg and controls the daily operation of the company.

In 2009, Zuckerberg hired Jewish economist David Ebersman as the Chief Financial Officer (CFO) of Facebook.

Zuckerberg recently claimed “Facebook was not originally created to be a company. It was built to accomplish a social mission—to make the world more open and connected.” In other words, Facebook makes the world easier to control. Politicians have noticed the potential of Facebook and reached out to Zuckerberg.

In a 2008 speech, Israeli President Shimon Peres claimed Jews could use Facebook to fight anti-Semitism.

Back in March, Peres actually visited Facebook headquarters in Menlo Park, California and praised Facebook as a “vehicle for social change”.

Hmmm, social change? How could Facebook be a vehicle for “social change”?

In a recent article from The New York Observer, Elise Knutsen described Facebook as an “online collective data farm”.

She explains “Facebook is a service and a product to its users. But they pay nothing to use it, and there is no native revenue stream. The value of the company—its main asset, to itself any and potential business partners—is the users themselves, and access to them and their information.”

Therefore, Knutsen claims “the more information Facebook gathers about you, the more the company is worth.”

Mark Zuckerberg clearly has no concern for the privacy or security of Facebook users.

Back in 2010, Business Insider released private IM's they had received from Mark Zuckerberg. In the messages, Zuckerberg called Facebook users "dumb fucks" for trusting his website with their "emails, pictures, and addresses".

Also in 2010, tech blogger Nick Bilton tweeted a conversation he had with a Facebook worker:

"Off record chat w/ Facebook employee. Me: How does Zuck feel about privacy?
Response: [laughter] He doesn't believe in it."

The controversy has affected the long term growth potential of Facebook. Some users decided delete their account and leave the website altogether.

In a CNN article from last June, Doug Gross reported Facebook had lost 7 million users and their market growth in America had stalled.

With Facebook's future success uncertain, Zuckerberg knew his company was overvalued by investors. He decided to cash in now and take advantage of his website's current popularity.

On February 1, Facebook filed for an initial public offering (IPO), which meant the company would start selling shares to the public and trading on Nasdaq.

When Facebook officially went public on May 18th, the price of their stock was valued at $38 a share.

HOWEVER, Zuckerberg knew his company's stock was not actually worth that much. He sold $720 million worth of shares before the Facebook's stock price quickly dropped to $32.

Now, some investors are suing Zuckerberg for hiding negative information about the future growth potential of the Facebook .

In fact, the The Independent (UK newspaper) reports the controversy has created a new word. "Zucked" is being used to describe what happened to Facebook investors who lost money.

Catchy, but I believe "Jewed" is more appropriate.

Ben Bernanke

The Federal Reserve

Money is a system and a philosophy, which is also a religion. Money is different than bartering (trade) because a third party gets involved and determines how much everything is worth.

Ancient Jewish merchants spread the idea of money when they gave loans to foreign rulers. This developed the credit system and created the idea of debt. These foreign rulers started borrowing from the merchants and living beyond what they could produce.

Eventually, Jewish merchants returned to collect their payment but the rulers often made deals with them instead. The merchants often received legal protection and privileges instead of monetary compensation.

In other words, Jewish merchants created currency and international trade to exploit foreign economies for profit.

When America was created, the Founding Fathers warned about the dangers of money and banking.

In 1791, James Madison warned “history records that the money changers have used every form of abuse, intrigue, deceit, and violent means possible to maintain their control over governments by controlling money and its issuance.”

In 1802, Thomas Jefferson wrote:

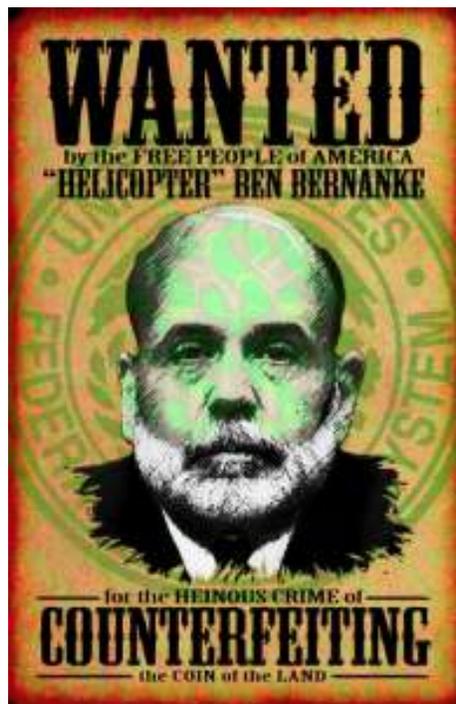

“If the American people ever allow private banks to control the issue of their currency, first by inflation, then by deflation, the banks and corporations that grow up around them will deprive the people of all property until their children wake-up homeless on the continent their fathers conquered.”

Later in 1816, Jefferson wrote:

“I believe that banking institutions are more dangerous to our liberties than standing armies.” Despite their warnings, the Federal Reserve Act of 1913 signed by Woodrow Wilson created the Federal Reserve, the current central banking system of the United States.

Several years later, Woodrow Wilson wrote:

“I am a most unhappy man. I have unwittingly ruined my country. A great industrial nation is controlled by its system of credit.” The Federal Reserve is a privately owned bank that prints and distributes American money. The more dollars the Federal Reserve “creates”, the less each currently existing dollar is worth (inflation). The bank makes a profit by lending out the money it creates and collecting interest. Bankers therefore add to their own wealth without doing any real work or producing anything of practical value (usury).

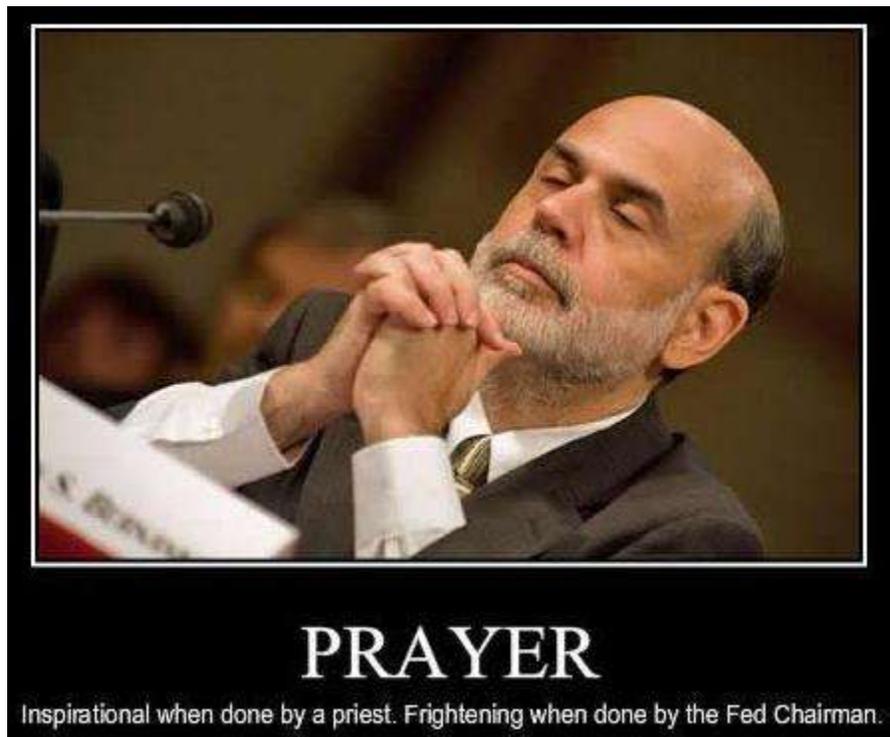

In 2006, Ben Shalom Bernanke was named the Chairman of the Federal Reserve. (He took over for Alan Greenspan, another Jew...)

Bernanke was given the nickname "Helicopter Ben" after he demonstrated he was eager to print more money and further devalue the dollar.

Bernanke grew up attending Ohav Shalomin synagogue in Dillon, South Carolina. He learned to speak Hebrew from his grandmother and his home was "fully kosher". As a teenager, Bernanke helped roll the Torah scrolls in his local synagogue.

In a 2005 article from The Jewish Daily Forward, Bernanke's childhood friend and Jewish Rabbi Arnold Stiebel said, "Just think, the youngster who helped me prepare the Sifrei Torah and gave me numerous insider pointers is now the nominee to be chairman of the Federal Reserve. Well, it's a small Jewish world."

Also in the same article, Bernanke's close friend, the chairman of New York University's economics department Mark Gertler described Bernanke and claimed Judaism "is really embedded in who he is".

Ray Kurzweil

Transhumanism

Ray Kurzweil is a Jewish inventor and futurist, described as “the rightful heir to Thomas Edison” by Inc. magazine and “the ultimate thinking machine” by Forbes.

He is known for his prediction that humans will soon transcend biological mortality and live forever.

He believes that rapid growth in technology will eventually lead to “singularity”, a moment when humans and machines will merge.

In the meantime though, Kurzweil takes 250 pills, 10 glasses of alkaline water, and 10 cups of green tea every day in an effort to “reprogram his biochemistry”.

But what if Kurzweil dies before “singularity”? Oh, he has that covered...

In the event of his sudden death, Kurzweil has paid for his body to be chemically preserved, frozen in liquid nitrogen, and stored in the hope that future medical technology will be able to revive him.

Wow... Is this real life?

Yes, Kurzweil is a believer in Transhumanism, the effort to develop technology that eliminates aging and enhances human abilities.

They are tired of being short, fat, bald, unattractive, and having higher risks for heart disease and breast cancer.

They want to change the natural order of the universe. They believe God made errors and they want to fix these “mistakes” with science and technology.

Their ultimate goal is Transhumanism, to merge with machines and live forever...

Jett & Jahn Media created the “Jews Behind Modern Culture” series to examine the true origin of modern American society.
